High density foam insulation sheets

These situations should follow recommendations for homes built on piers. Crawlspace Insulation Details Figure 1 Rigid Insulation Wraps Concrete Surfaces Cold concrete foundation wall must be protected from interior moisture-laden air in summer and winter. Rim joist assembly must be insulated with air impermeable insulation or insulated on the exterior. Rigid insulation completely wraps exposed concrete preventing interior air from contacting potential concrete condensing surface. Seams in rigid insulation and joints to other materials sealed to provide air barrier. Rigid insulation is vapor semi-impermeable or vapor semi-permeable (foil facing or plastic facing not present). Rigid insulation provides bond break between foundation wall and slab when insulation is installed before slab is poured. Figure 2 Interior Rim Joist Air barrier needed to protect the rim joist from interior moisture-laden air in summer and winter. Seams in rigid insulation and joints to other materials sealed to provide air barrier. Figure 3 Rigid Insulation with Supplemental Insulated Frame Wall Assembly Rigid foam insulation board assembly must provide continuous air barrier and capillary break around concrete foundation. Rigid insulation is vapor semi-impermeable or vapor semi-permeable (foil facing or plastic facing not present). Protective membrane adhered to top of foundation wall and wrapped over top of insulation. Insulation material non-moisture sensitive and not subject to degradation with ground contact. It is also necessary to install a capillary break between the foundation wall and framing. If it is not possible to treat the crawlspace as a part of the house such as in flood zones in coastal areas or in dry climates where it is not necessary, it is important to construct the house such that the crawlspace is isolated from the house—outside of the building boundary.
